LAW 468, Section 1

Instructions

Answer TWO of the questions listed below. Each of the TWO questions that you answer is worth 37.5 marks, for a grand total of 75 marks.

Questions

1. Alice Woolley argues that “to the extent that civility means the enforcement of good manners amongst lawyers, it is not a proper subject for professional regulation”. Should civility – whether it is understood in this way or otherwise – be regulated by codes of conduct for lawyers?
2. In MacDonald Estate v. Martin, Justice Sopinka held that disqualification of a law firm is not automatic when a conflict of interest arises from a lawyer switching firms. Justice Cory held that disqualification should always occur in this scenario to preserve public confidence in the administration of justice, and that institutional mechanisms or ethical screens do not suffice. Which view is persuasive?
3. Should corporate counsel bear in mind the public interest in carrying out their work? Should corporate counsel act as the “conscience” of the corporation?
4. Should judges who retire from the bench be allowed to return to the practice of law? Should the answer depend on the court from which the individual retired?
5. In Rondel v. Worsley, Lord Denning states that an advocate “has a duty to the court which is paramount”. The advocate has “time and time again to choose between his duty to his client and his duty to the court” – a “conflict often difficult to resolve”. Do you agree? What are the qualities of an ethical advocate?
6. Do lawyers and the legal profession have a duty, ethical or otherwise, to enhance access to justice? What sort of changes could be made – by the state, the legal profession, individual lawyers or other actors – to enhance access to justice?
